On the edges of empathy: seeking understanding through conversation

Through a sequence of interviews, this series explores the intersections of choice, family, circumstance and love in the lives of people who are often seen as dwelling on the fringes of society. The vulnerability of their existence and their sharing unravels a deep humanity, inviting the audience to suspend judgment and simply listen.

ABOUT THE ARTIST

Joff (Steven Carter) is a South African based artist, born in the city of Cape Town. Influenced by the flow and form found in initial experiments with ink, Joff has carved a unique style in his work, which ranges from film to studio art and street art.

Much of his work explores and transforms the boundaries of anatomical structure: discovering proportions that feel comfortable to the eye while certain elements might be disfigured and not true to scale. In doing so, Joff seeks to represent beauty in the oddity of unnatural forms by relying on emotional connections we forge with particular recognisable and realistic details.

A close-up photograph of two hands clasped together, resting on a white, draped fabric. The hands are positioned in the center of the frame, with fingers interlaced. The lighting is soft and even, highlighting the texture of the skin and the fabric. The overall mood is intimate and tender.
